TERRIFYING FIRES Rage During Wednesday in Killingly-Houses and Other Buildings Saved Only by Backfiring and Plowing

Forest fires that raged with excep-ional fury swept over hundreds of cres in towns in this section during Wednesday and, driven by a high and changing wind, made the efforts of many scores of fire fighters useless as to overcoming them, though strenuous work drove the flames back from time to time, and in many places where valuable property, including homes, property, including homes, langered. Danielson was the were endangered. center of an arc of these fires, one of the worst of which was in that section of Killingly between Attawaugan and Dayville Four Corners, Another fire that assumed alarming proportions raged in Canterbury during the afternoon, frightening a number of residents there into the belief that their homes and other buildings would be swept away. Telephone calls for help were flashed in all directions and many men responded, but not a quarter as many as were needed to fight the fires with any degree of success.

Some of the women who were in the danger zone, both in the Killingly fire and in the Canterbury fire, became panic-stricken, and with good cause, for the spectacle that the onrushing fires presented was little less than ap-

The fire in Killingly broke out in the woods to the north and east of the town farm property at about 8.30. DIES SUDDENLY. Miss Malvina A. Howe, of Thompson Girls' School, Expires from Heart

Miss Malvina A. Howe, one of the founders of the Howe-Marot school for girls established at Thompson in the fall of 1913, died very suddenly of heart failure at the school about mid-night Tuesday. Miss Howe had been in poor health for a number of weeks, a great shock to the teachers and students at the school. Miss Howe was a teacher of long ex-perience and had been very successful with the school at Thompson. From 1879 for a period of twelve years she was a teacher in Hartford Public High Farmington, from 1895 to 1905, a period of ten years. She was afterwards connected with a school at Dayton, Ohio, from which city she came to Thompson and established the Howe-Marot school in the former Doane mansion, during the summer of 1913.
